An in vitro perfusion system has been used to explore the possible regulatory role of growth hormone-releasing factor (GRF) and somatostatin (SS) in the basal and stimulated secretion of prolactin (PRL). Perfusion of dispersed anterior pituitary cell cultures in the presence of 10 nM GRF demonstrated a 4-fold increase in PRL secretion that peaked after 30 min and was still detectable at 60 min. These same levels were obtained from 60 to 120 min when exposure was to 100 nM GRF, and this was not accompanied by any change in glucose consumption. This secretory increase was similarly observed at the 10 nM concentration of GRF. The glucose-stimulated secretion of PRL was also observed at all time points, suggesting that the GRF-induced increase in PRL secretion was not dependent upon the presence of glucose. The GRF-induced PRL secretion was abolished by 0.2 U/ml ovine GRF, 0.1 mg/ml dl-alpha-MSH, and  $10^{-6}$  M somatostatin (SS). The ability of ovine GRF to increase the secretory response to both glucose and dl-alpha-MSH has several similarities to the actions of GRF in somatotropes. The GRF-induced PRL secretion, however, occurred in the presence of a high concentration of SS. This suggests that some of the stimulatory actions of GRF may be
